By the time this blog submission is read, the beautiful summer nights will be a distant memory. As the days become shorter and my kids check off their lists in preparation for another academic school year, I thought I would return to a previous blog topic; Hearing in the Classroom!
For clinical audiologists, the start of school usually means a rush of children into our clinics for appointments for routine hearing tests, requested by teachers or parents concerned about the listening skills of the little ones, as well as hearing aid checks and repairs. I have recently wondered, are schools across the country requesting hearing tests for incoming kindergarten children? Maybe our readers could let us know? Enjoy the blogs!
