

Other People's Ideas

Published November 20th, 2017

Calvin Staples, MSc

I recently read an ENT report that used the term vascular loop mass. Personally, I have never come across this and was not sure how this differentiated from an acoustic neuroma/vestibular schwannoma. Interestingly enough, my first stop on the old Googler landed me on the Hearing Health Matters site, which revealed the link below discussing vascular loops. The additional blogs focus on clinical topics that routinely come up in patient interactions that we rarely see significant exposure to in our training programs.